3 Grammar

3.1 Stative -o/-bi

- In today's dialogue, Maxine and Tanya talked about events happening right now.
- Now we will discuss one way to talk about “right now,” using the stative -o/-bi.
- In previous sessions, we have talked about “patient verbs.” Recall the pieces cha- ‘my’ and chi- ‘your,’ along with our recipe for patient verbs, but this time using -o/-bi:

Patient Verb Sentence Easy Recipe (Stative O/BI, Statement)

If the verb ends on the vowel -o (e.g. kaano), this tense is -bi.

- (1) [Patient + k] [Patient + Verb + Tense]
 [ano + k] [cha- + kaano + bi]
 I my good is Meaning: ‘I am good.’

If the verb does not end on -o, this tense will be -o. The vowel before it will disappear: hoopa → hoop-o, hoyap.li → hoyap.l-o.

- (2) [Patient + k] [Patient + Verb + Tense]
 [ano + k] [cha- + hoyapl + o]
 I my tired is Meaning: ‘I am tired.’

- The -o/-bi tense, which we might call a stative tense, describes different kinds of states that individuals can be in.
- With verbs like kaano ‘be good’, hoopa ‘be sick’, hoyapli ‘be tired’, it describes currently ongoing states.
- With verbs that describe non-stative events, e.g. dancing, or opening, the sentences are usually interpreted as ‘we’re now in a state that results from this event happening’, ‘in a state of having done this event.’

- (3) Ava-k okkich-on tiyap.l-o. (4) Ava-k bit.l-o.
 Ava door open.LI-STATE Ava dance.LI-STATE
 ‘Ava has opened the door.’ ‘Ava has danced.’

- O/bi forms are statements. To form a corresponding question, we simply drop this tense and add nasalization:

Patient Verb Sentence Easy Recipe (Stative O/BI, Question)

- (5) [Patient + k] [Patient + Verb.Tense]
 [isno + k] [chi- + hoyapli]?
 you your tired
Meaning: ‘Are you tired?’

Let’s practice! Ask your classmate how they are feeling.

Answer using some of the verbs below.

Examples of Alabama Patient Verbs expressing Feelings

Verb	Translation	Verb	Translation
ayokpa	be happy	noklikiicha	be afraid
kaano	be good	maɬatli	be scared, wild
yawoota	be jittery, nervous	hoopa	be sick
yowaapa	be uneasy, tense	hoyapli	be tired

3.2 Asking Questions

- Now that you know how to ask basic questions, you can practice asking people more complicated questions; for example, “What are you doing?” “Who did you see?”
- Questions that use words like what, when, where, why are called wh-questions in English. Alabama has these too, but they don’t usually start with wh!
- Today we will learn two of these words: ‘what?’—naasok/naason; and ‘who?’—naksok/nakson.

Asking ‘Wh-Questions’ with Two Nouns Easy Recipe

(6) Question

[Subject + k] [Object + n] [Verb + -hchõ]?

Ava-k naaso-n wihli-hchõ?

‘What did Ava look for?’

(7) Statement

[Subject + k] [Object + n] [Verb + -ti].

Ava-k oolimpa-n wihli-ti.

‘Ava looked for food’.

Question Words:

naaso-	what
nakso-	who

- Add -k to the ‘Subject’ of the action.
- Add -n to the ‘Object’ of the action. Who is it happening to? Who is undergoing the action?
- When including a question word, put naaso- and nakso- in the ‘Subject’ or ‘Object’ positions. Make sure to add -k or -n.
- Add hchõ for questions or -ti for statements because we’re talking about the past.
- First put the Subject, then the Object, then the Verb—and you’re done!

Let’s Practice! How would you ask this in Alabama?
